Winchester City Council's tourism service would like to thank the following for their help in producing this leaflet: Graham Scobie; Charles Inglis; Winchester College; the marketing team at The Ageas Bowl; Stephen Baldwin. The excerpt from a poem featured on the front cover on the Winchester College feature was written in 1976 by The Reverend Reynell Cotton (1717-1796) School Master of Hyde School, Winchester and President of the Hambledon Club in 1773 and 1774.

There is also a Jane Austen trail available with an itinerary that links to this one.

CRICKET

Trace its evolution in Winchester and Hampshire's countryside

"Let's join in the praise of the bat and the wicket, and sing in full chorus the patrons of cricket..."

Games akin to cricket have been played on the fields of England since the Middle Ages, but a game called 'cricket' first appears in 1598.

Hampshire's own cricketing history owes much to the legacy of the Hambledon and Alresford cricket clubs and the pre-eminent players produced at Winchester College.

Why not make Winchester your base as you uncover the fascinating landmarks of cricket dotted across Hampshire?

1 Winchester College

Visit the college to find out more about where Altham coached cricket and Douglas Jardine, the famous Ashton brothers and Hubert Doggart all learned to play cricket - and see for yourself the immaculately kept grounds overlooking the water meadows where they played. For more information, or to book a guided tour call 01962 621 209 or email enterprises@wincol.ac

3 St Catherine's Hill

A Latin poem refers to a match played on this unspoilt beauty spot overlooking Winchester in 1647. The view of the city has changed over the centuries, but remains breathtaking. For information on self guided walks that include St Catherine's Hill go to www.visitwinchester.co.uk or call 01962 840 500.

4 Hambleton

Visit The Bat & Ball Inn whose famous landlords have included Richard Nyren who ran Hambleton Cricket Club, and Andrew Freemantle, a player who Nyren himself admired. Cross the road and you'll see a statue and the cricket pitch that was once home to the famous pavilion. Call 023 9263 2692 to book a table. Postcode: PO8 0UB

6 Alresford

In the eighteenth century the noted cricketer Thomas Taylor was landlord of The Globe in Alresford. Why not take in the view of the lake over lunch and then walk around the well preserved Georgian town with its circular river walk that is remarkably unchanged today. Alresford's cricketing connections continued to recent times - Sun House, on Sun Lane was once home to legendary commentator John Arlott.

7 West Meon

Thomas Lord, founder of Lord's Cricket Ground, retired to West Meon in the Winchester district. You can visit The Thomas Lord an Arts & Crafts Inn named in his honour to enjoy local produce from their kitchen garden. View Lord's tombstone at the local church to complete the experience. To book a table at The Thomas Lord call 01730 829 244. Postcode: GU32 1LN.

8 The Ageas Bowl

It seems Hampshire is not going to give up its reputation as a centre of cricketing excellence. The multi-million pound stadium started hosting Test series in 2011. Visit www.ageasbowl.com to find out more

2 The Bell Inn

Walk along the water meadows to the Bell Inn in St Cross for a Cricket themed outing! Postcode SO23 9RE

5 The Globe Alresford

Thomas Taylor (1753-1806), a famous English cricketer was the landlord of this pub (see Alresford's Hambleton Players, right). Today it's a family and dog friendly experience with good food and stunning views over the lake. Call 01962 733 118 to book. Postcode: SO24 9DB

How to plan your visit to the cradle of cricket

The map shown on the right is designed to help you plan your visit to Winchester and the district and is numbered to sequence the developments of the sport chronologically. It's up to you how you plan the itinerary of your personal homage to cricket. You'll notice strong links between inns and the game - offering you a legitimate opportunity to explore some of Hampshire's oldest and finest hostelries from The Bat & Ball in Hambledon to The Globe in Alresford. In West Meon a thriving gastro-pub named after Thomas Lord showcases the best of local food.

And there's also an opportunity to visit Winchester and stroll up St Catherine's Hill (site of a cricket match between college boys in 1647) or take a tour of Winchester College itself where so many cricketers, including the controversial Douglas Jardine, honed their skills. As Hampshire is now the county of The Ageas Bowl, this strong tradition is clearly continuing with pride.

Early days

1622: One of the first records of 'cricket' ever being played is in a legal case in Boxgrove, West Sussex. Two men were accused of playing cricket in the church grounds. The churchwardens stated that it was "contrarie to the seventh article (Sabbath) and for that they use to breake windowes with the ball". Their defence was that the game they were playing 'was not cricket', hence the origins of the phrase 'it's not cricket'.

1647: A Latin poem by Robert Matthew contains a reference to a cricket match involving Winchester College pupils on St Catherine's Hill. Although cricket was certainly played earlier in the county, this is the first written record of a game in Hampshire.

1654: During Oliver Cromwell's Protectorate the playing of cricket was prohibited on the Sabbath, and in this year the penalty fine was doubled to two shillings.

1660: The Restoration of the Monarchy in England lifted the sanctions although the church continued to disapprove of the playing of the game on Sundays.

The Alresford Connection

The Alresford Connection
According to John Arlott, (see right), Alresford Cricket Club was one of the strongest cricket teams in England, standing „higher in cricket than any town its size has done in the history of the game“ between 1770 and 1795.

Alresford's excellent cricketing reputation was well deserved and fiercely protected by the players. In 1774 The Hampshire Chronicle reported that when the team appeared to be losing a match against the united parishes of Alton and Chawton the Alresford players were not keen to continue play the next day on the same ground as was generally the practice.

According to the newspaper this was because, 'not having lost a match the whole summer, they were determined to preserve their fame entire throughout the season.'

Alresford's Hambledon Players

Thomas Taylor (1753-1806) This famous English cricketer and Alresford resident played for the Hambledon Club and is regarded as one of the most outstanding players of the 18th century. Taylor was another cricketing innkeeper. He was the landlord of The Globe at Alresford (see map, left) and was buried in Old Alresford in 1806

Richard Aubrey Veck (1756-1823) Born in New Alresford, Veck made 35 known first-class appearances for the Hambledon Club between 1776 and 1784. Veck was a regular Hampshire player for nine seasons until 1784, but then left the game at age 28, apparently to set up a business in Bishop's Waltham, where he died in 1823.

Andrew Freemantle (1768-1837) Born in Bishop's Sutton, just outside Alresford, Freemantle made his mark for Hampshire during the Hambledon era. His debut was in 1788 season and by 1810 he had made 136 known major match appearances. His brother John Freemantle was also a Hambledon player and their families went on to play for the Alresford club for generations. Andrew took on The Bat & Ball Inn in Hambledon in his thirties.

John Arlott (1914-1991)

The cricket broadcaster and commentator John Arlott lived in Alresford between 1961 and 1981.

Alresford Town Partnership and council erected a plaque to mark his residence at 52 East Street (The Old Sun), celebrating its unveiling with a commemorative cricket match in the New Alresford Ground and a launch event at The Globe.

Rules and regulations

1760-1771: During the period of Hambledon's primacy, several rule changes occurred that turned the sport into its modern recognisable form.

Bowling: Delivery of the ball was pitched under-arm, the ball was originally rolled along the ground and then hit with bat shaped like a hockey stick. In the 1820s William Lillywhite lead a campaign to all round arm bowling. The laws were changed to the over-arm style bowling we have today in time for the 1864 season.

Wicket: The third (middle stump) was introduced. Before this if the ball passed through the two stumps the batsman was deemed not out;

Bats: The original bats had been of crooked or 'hockey-stick' design but evolved into a flat-faced type to cope with the new bowling style. In 1771 the width of the bat defined as $4\frac{1}{4}$ inches when noted cricketer 'Shock' White emerged onto the pitch one September day in 1771 with a bat the full width of the wicket.

This unsporting behaviour led the Hambledon Club to minute: "In view of the performance of one White of Ryegate on September 23rd that four and quarter inches shall be the breadth forthwith." The ruling was accepted by most other clubs elsewhere, and recognised in the Code of 1774.

The Lord legacy (1755-1832)

Thomas Lord, founder of Lord's Cricket Ground in London is buried in the church yard of St. John's Church in West Meon. He retired to the village in 1830. An award-winning Arts & Crafts Inn has been trading there as the Thomas Lord public house and restaurant since 1955.

Originally from Thirsk, North Yorkshire and Educated in Diss, Norfolk, Lord moved to London to bowl for the White Conduit Club. He met the 9th Earl of Winchilsea, George Finch and the future Duke of Richmond, Charles Lennox, who offered him the financial backing he needed to build his first cricket ground off Dorset Square. When the lease ran out on this, Lord purchased two fields in St John's Wood, and a ground was completed there in 1809. In 1813 plans were agreed to transect this site with the Regency Canal so the ground was moved again to its present site where it opened in 1814.

Winchester College's cricketing legacy

Bishop Ken, a scholar of the college, recorded that he was fond of the game when he was a boy in the 1650s and 60s. In 1845, a college team was reputed to have been surprised when they played a Basingstoke team who won the match by using a catapult instead of a bowler. Regular matches between Winchester, Eton and Harrow began in 1825.

William Lillywhite b1792*

Frederick William Lillywhite was one of the great bowlers of the nineteenth century

He was coach to college teams in the early 1850s, including preparing the boys for their annual end of term matches at Lords against Eton and then Harrow.

He lead the revolution which moved bowling from underarm ('Hambledon style') to round-arm where the ball and hand must not be higher than the shoulder. With his sons he founded Lillywhite's in Piccadilly London.

Harry Altham (b 1888)

Harry was among the best known personalities in the world of cricket. He played, legislated, test selected and was a historian and a coach for 30 years. A master and cricket coach in Winchester, he was also part of a family of first class cricketers

In 1926, while in Winchester, as a college master, he wrote 'The History of Cricket', one of the earliest definitive works and it is still a major reference work today. His great legacy is the formation of national coaching schemes.

The Ashton Brothers

"We thank thee, we praise thee, we bless thee O Lord, for Hubert, Percy, Gilbert and Claude," - so goes the old Winchester College song, and for good reason. Sporting prowess ran in the Ashton family - all four brothers were Blues at Cambridge and also excelled in football. Gilbert, Hubert and Claude all captained the university team in the three consecutive seasons from 1921 to 1923.

Awarded the Military Cross in the first world war, Hubert (1892-1979) went on to play for Essex scoring more than 1,000 runs in both 1921 and 1922. He was knighted in 1959 in recognition of his services as an MP.

succeeded Percy as captain of the university's cricket team amassing 916 runs and claiming 50 wickets with his medium-pace bowling, together with 21 catches. He played for Essex between 1934 and 1938, his career cut tragically short when he died during a mid-air training accident just before the Second World War.

Douglas Robert Jardine (1900-1958)

As an English cricketer and captain of the England cricket team in the early 1930s, Jardine, an Old Wykehamist (the name given to Winchester College alumni) is perhaps best known for captaining the English squad during its 1932-33 Ashes tour of Australia.

His team employed the controversial 'body line' technique (where the bowler deliberately aimed the cricket ball at the body of the batsman), tactics employed to neutralize the opposing Australian batsmen, particularly Don Bradman, and which caused a veritable storm in the cricketing world.

Hubert Doggart OBE (b.1925)

Hubert Doggart was educated at Winchester College and King's College, a Cambridge blue in five different sports and captain in four.

He taught at Winchester College (1950-1972) while maintaining a successful amateur cricket career for Cambridge University and Sussex Cricket Clubs. Doggart went on to represent England in two Test matches in 1950 and has held many offices in sports administration, such as President of the MCC (1981-1982).

Mansoor Ali Khan 'Tiger' Pataudi (b.1941)

Born into an Indian royal household, Mansur Ali Khan Pataudi completed his education at Winchester College after inheriting the titular dignity of Nawab of Pataudi upon his father's death.

After playing for Oxford, he went on to captain the Indian national side at 21 and played 310 matches, scoring 15,425 runs, his highest being 203 (not-out). Mansur Khan made his Test debut against England at Delhi in December 1961. Following his retirement, Mansur Ali Khan Pataudi became the Indian national cricket coach (1974-75) and later refereed ICC matches

A brief history of cricket in Winchester

The history of cricket in the city of Winchester closely mirrors the changes in its evolution. At the time that Robert Matthew wrote his poem in 1647 which refers to Winchester's College pupils playing on St Catherine's Hill, it was a casual sport played by boys.

By the 1770s, Winchester was regularly fielding adult cricket teams: it is recorded that in 1774 Winchester refused to allow Bishop's Waltham to finish a match on Twyford Down although only six runs were needed. Rather than throw the match away, the Waltham players stayed overnight and subsequently warned other teams against playing such unreasonable opponents.

In 1796 we know that a match took place between the tradesmen of Winchester and the tradesmen of Southampton, marking the shift in the game from a children's game to an adult's sport, popular with working men. Another match between local tradesmen was recorded in 1856 at Oliver's Battery when a team representing the town north of the High Street played against another from the south side.

As the game became more popular, its following among the gentry grew and this is reflected in the number of Winchester College pupils who rose to prominence in the sport. We take a look at some of these noted players...

When Hampshire County Cricket Club looked into renovating Southampton's old County Ground in 1987, it was agreed that the demands placed upon the pavilion and grounds had outgrown the facilities. Thirteen years and £24m later, The Rose Bowl opened.

In 2012 The Rose Bowl was renamed the Ageas Bowl and has been home to many international cricketers since the move from the old County Ground in 2001. Shane Warne played with Hampshire from 2000-2007. He was Club captain for four years, and was joined by fellow Australian internationals Simon Katich, Shane Watson and Stuart Clark.

Hampshire also has a strong history of developing England players: the likes of Robin Smith, Chris Smith, Shaun Udal, Chris Tremlett and Dimitri Mascarenhas have all represented their country.

In 2006 the Ageas Bowl hosted the Twenty20 international against Sri Lanka and, following a successful planning application, was awarded Test venue status by the England and Wales Cricket Board. It hosted its first Test match, England vs Sri Lanka, in 2011 to a crowd of up to 25,000 people.

The new Hilton Hotel at the Ageas Bowl offers 171 bedrooms for guests looking for a an indulgent and luxurious experience overlooking the pitch or the stunning golf course.

In 2019, the Ageas Bowl will play host to some of the ICC World Cup matches, making it the perfect time to explore the area where cricket was born.
